

rachael mccampbell

HOME PAGE

SEARCH & FILTER

TOPICS

- News
- Santa Monica
- Seven Days
- Sports
- Life And Arts
- Calendar
- Police
- Samohi
- APB
- Schools
- Santa Monica
- City Council
- Opinion
- Baseball
- Los Angeles

OFF

SHOW MORE

DATE

OFF

JUL 16

JUL 16

sort by POST DATE

sort by POPULARITY

sort by RELEVANCE

POPULAR TAGS

- News
- Sports
- Life and Arts
- Opinion
- Seven Days
- Horoscopes
- Video
- Twilight Dance Series

JOIN

To join our e-mail list, please enter your e-mail address.

Join

WEATHER

Art News: McCampbell And Mendez Go for the Gold

POSTED OCT. 19, 2007, 12:00:00 PM (UNASSIGNED)

Share on Facebook

Rachael McCampbell and Valerie Mendez are longtime residents of the Santa Monica/Venice area.

Both are exhibiting currently at T.A.G. Gallery. Although their subjects are quite different, they share an affinity for the color gold – and possibly for painting their dreams.

McCampbell, who grew up on a farm in Tennessee, loves horses, and her paintings in this show are all of horses, in an acrylic palette of brown, gold, and gray. In her artists' statement, McCampbell notes that "it's been said that horses are the projection of our dreams about ourselves (our inner strength and power)." Her horses indeed seem to be running in a dream landscape. When the bodies and limbs of the horses are seen in the foreground, other horses are glimpsed behind them, in outline or fading into the mist. While some of this is the craft at work – McCampbell mixes dirt into her paint and uses scratching and sanding for effect – the blurred parts of her paintings also suggest the speed of the horses' movements and the ephemeral nature of the racing horses themselves.

Sometimes, as in "From Bitter Searching of the Heart, We Rise to Play a Greater Part," the horses appear to be vanishing in a cloud of "dust" created with silvery acrylic paint. In "Sky Riders" a single horse's hoof is boldly visible, but other horse's legs are seen in a blur, as if running too fast to be detected by the naked eye.

In "Primal Memory," a large canvas that evokes the equine panoramas of Rosa Bonheur, several horses have stopped to drink the water in a stream – but above them can be seen horses in outline, galloping within a cloud. So in McCampbell's vision, the horses themselves have dreams.

Valerie Mendez's "Tales From the Pacific" started with a poem of that name, an "abbreviated tribute to a day in the Pacific Ocean." Each of her paintings uses a line from the poem as a starting point. Her work explores "obscuring and revealing," with the painting being done in oil and acrylic on layers of Plexiglas. Circles are a dominant shape, and warm browns, beiges, and gold leaf are the prevailing colors.

The use of shapes does not always follow the themes suggested by the lines of poetry. "Mountains Broke the Horizon" is a pyramid of gold against a blue background, while "Ocean Sifted Midday Heat" presents a swirling ring of brown streaked with gold leaf. Looking closely, one can see tiny blue dots amidst the "midday heat" of the ring.

"Latitudes Entrapped the Moon" uses strips of gold leaf to form a criss-crossed sphere. The gold lines resemble the latitude-longitude lines on typical globes of the earth – but this is supposed to be the moon. No matter. Mendez's concept of the sun, seen in "Dawn Rushed the Sky" is a brownish circle, touched with gold leaf, within a darker penumbra.

ADVERTISE

To place an ad, please call us at 310-577-6507, ext. 134 Or submit online.

POLLS

How often do plan to attend the 2010 Twilight Dance Series this summer?

- A.) Never
- B.) I'll try to make it to one
- C.) I'll go two-three times this summer
- D.) More than five times
- E.) I won't miss a single concert!
- F.) What is the Twilight Dance Series?

Fair, 73 F

Warmer colors traditionally stimulate, while cool colors calm the viewer down. Yet the warm tones of Mendez's unique ocean tribute have a calming effect that harmonizes with McCampbell's dreamlike horse visions. Misty and gold-tinged, this exhibit is perfect viewing for the autumn season.

The show runs at T.A.G. Gallery through October 27. T.A.G. is located at 2903 Santa Monica Blvd., 310.829.9556, taggallery.net.

CLASSIFIEDS

Visit Classifieds listings

Like Be the first of your friends to like this.

DIRECTORIES

- Real Estate
- Dining Guide
- Summer Camps
- Wedding Directory
- Santa Monica Guide
- Religious Directory

Post a comment

Name

E-Mail

City

Comments

Submit

SUPPLEMENTS

- Camp Guide
- Health
- Home and Garden
- Seniors
- Wedding Guide
- West Side Dining Guide
- West Side Family Life

SITES

- SM Visitors Center
- City of Santa Monica
- SM City Council
- Transportation
- SM Emergency Info
- Pico Youth/Family Center
- Beach Report Card
- Contact Us

UCLA

Health System

It begins with U

Learn more >